Here are the sizes for each part of the template: Shape Size (Width × Height) Large Square Clothing Parts 128 × 128 Pixels Front and Back torso Rectangle Height 64 × 128 Pixels Torso Sides (R, L)Sides of arms/legs (L, B, R, F) Wide rectangle 128 × 64 pixels Up and bottom of the small square torso 64 × 64 pixels Top and bottom of arms/legs (U, D) When applying clothing to roblox R15 avatar items/avatars in Roblox, some limits exist with templates. Here are a couple of examples of how you should and should not design shoes in a pants template. In this example, shoe designs are placed near the bottom of leg regions (L, B, R, F) but do not extend too far upwards. This provides a pleasant separation between the shoes and the bottom of the jeans. Here, shoe designs extend too far across the leg regions (L, B, R, F) that make them look like part of the pants. The same problem can occur near other joints in the avatar's body. Some avatars like Circuit Breaker don't fit clothes, by design. For shirts and pants, the loaded image must be the exact size of the template (585 pixels wide and 559 pixels high) or the load will fail. Once you're done with your design, you need to upload it to Roblox. Save the template file. Note that you can use 8-bit alpha channels for transparent regions. Go to the Create page. Click Shirts, Pants, or T-Shirts in the left column, depending on your design. In the main area of the window, click Choose File to select the template file. Write a creative name for Element. Click the Upload button. Once approved by Roblox, the item will appear as one of your creations and can be applied to your avatar or offered for sale to other Roblox players.
